decided to meet with the media around 4:30 in the afternoon. The meeting proved to be a big disappointment. There was no deal.

The going rate for a veteran backup quarterback in the NFL currently is in the $800,000 to $1 million range and that is what the Browns offered.

Simms' agent had twice that in mind, a sizeable hurdle which neither side was able to clear in one afternoon.

Everyone then went home.

On the advice of his agent, Simms refused to talk with the media, the first time in 24 hours he had clammed up about it.

This was Simms' show from start to finish and in the end he was a no-show. He slipped secretly out of the Browns' headquarters about 6 p.m. Only one reporter saw him leave.

Simms started this stampede Wednesday in New York and by Thursday night he had everybody buffaloed.

Not an auspicious beginning.

Mike Tomczak is starting to look pretty good from here.
